We all know that there are just some traditional plays that come around in December, but one about a mischievous little boy who brings winter and nips at our noses isn't always on the list, probably because parents don't want their children to get any ideas and start causing some mayhem of their own.

But this year the boy with the icy touch will come to the Limassol Theatre Arts School on Friday and keep the stage nice and cold until Sunday.

In this version of the Jack Frost story, Frost is on a mission to help a girl realise the beauty of her stories. Will he succeed, you just have to go along to the performance full of song, dance, colourful costumes and scenery to find out.
